

HOT Evidence

Adults With Chronic Conditions: Social Participation and Leisure

Why This Matters

- ▶ Living with a chronic condition often presents a challenge in finding leisure activities that bring fulfillment, meaning, enjoyment and a sense of purpose.
- ▶ Occupational therapy practitioners should implement interventions that focus on the outcomes of participation in meaningful life roles and engagement in social and leisure participation as primary outcomes.

Self-Management for Social Participation and Leisure

Evidence-Based Interventions

Motivational Interviewing and Coaching

Identify barriers to activity participation and select strategies to overcome barriers

Problem-solving

Set goals

Service Delivery

Person-centered and tailored modes of delivery (i.e. telehealth, computer-guided, individual, or group interventions)

Find the Evidence

Visit www.aota.org to review this Critically Appraised Topic Paper from a Self-Management Interventions for Social and Leisure Participation Among Adults with Chronic Conditions